RY RECENT ARRIVALS FROM AMERI manly characteristics of their ancient stock rather than initiate a people zo alien to them in blood, in character and in antocedeuts. These meaningless social courtesies which at well-sound upon the gay, volatile, mercurial Frenchman, seem absurd effectations when practiced by the tall, grave, scata Scandinavian. The intelligent Swedes zeel this, but they are powerless to make headway against the influence of a Court which was wholly French, even before Bernadotte's time. "We are a race of apes," said one of them to me faiterly. Gausarur III, was wholly French, even before Bernadotte's time. "We are a race of apes," said one of them to me faiterly. Gausarur III, was wholly French, the faiterly. Gausarur III, was wholly French, and ascended the farone.

Stockholm was already commenced when he ascended the farone.

Stockholm manners, at present are a curious mixture of English and French, the latter element, of course, being predominant. In coordinate, the gentlemen are English, with exaggration. Nowhere are to be seen such one monaly tall and stiff black chimney pots (misnamed hats) nowhere such straight cut overcosts, descending to the very heels. You might stick all the men you see into pasteboad cards like a row of piass so pracisely are they citched upon the same model. But when you meet one of these grin, fancereal figures, he pulls off his hat with a pollteness which is more than French; he keeps it off, perhaps, while he is speaking; you shake hands and accept his invitation togenter his house. After you are within he greets you as excount time with the same erremonies as if you had then first met; he says "the for sit "—quivalent tor," thank you for the pleasure of your company the last time,"—and, after you rish is over, you part with equal-formality. At dinner the guests stand gravely around the table with clasped hands before sitting down. This is repeated on rising after which they bow to each other and shake hands with the hoost of ceremony to thank the object of the proper of the proper of the pol or Viliage Fist, countring 1,321 acres, has been to Fisid out by A.
